Adventures of Tad;

HAPS AND MISAPS OF A LOST SACHEL.

A Story for Young and Old.

BY FRANK H. CONVERSE.

Author of "PETER ADAMS," "BLOWN OUT

TO SEA," "TAD," "GREAT," etc.

Copyright, 1886, by D. Lothrop & Co., and Published by Special Arrangement.

CHAPTER VII.—CONTINUED.

"The men pulled four into the boat, then," said Polly, in a hushed avostruck voice, "a lady—a beautiful lady with a little baby in her arms, was drifting by. Captain Flagg reached out for her, but she said my baby first, and held it right up in both hands, so he couldn't help catching hold of it. Then a great sea except the lady away. A piece of the wreck broke a hole in the boat's side," continued Polly, steadily her voice with an effort, "and the crew had hard work to get ashore. They managed to somehow, though, and the saved people were sent up to Bixport. Captain Flagg took the baby—that was mine—home to his wife. Ever and over so many bottles of little children, and Tad, with a little shudder, "and the beautiful lady among them. Some of the passengers had seen her with her husband and baby on board the steamer, but no one of the saved people knew their names.

Lots of folks who had friends and relations on the "Pomeranian" came on to Bixport and took the ladies away, but nobody recognized the beautiful lady, so Captain Flagg had her buried here, and this stone put up. There was a rug on her wedding finger, that I always wear on a little chain round my neck," and Polly closed the front of her simple blue collar, with "Prattie" engraved on it, so Captain

Flagg named me the same—that's why they call me 'Polly.'"

"Then the beautiful lady was your mother, and you the little baby?"

breathlessly cried Tad.

Polly nodded gravely, and again the far-away look came to her eyes, as they rested on the grassy mound at her feet. But soon the practical side of her nature asserted itself.

"Come, Tad," she said, rising to her feet, "it's getting pretty near supper-time, and I must help Mother Flagg—she's got doughnuts to fry." So the two made their way out of the old church-yard, and entered the home gate at the same time as Captain Flagg, who, with a radiant face, was just returning from his interview with Miss

Smith.

"You're to go over there in the morning," Tad," said the captain, after disclosing to him the nature of his own errand to the home of the maiden lady in question, "and if she likes the out of your job she'll hire you out for together with such other information as shall satisfy the subscriber, and that, said representative is the true and lawful owner thereof, the said bag before mentioned will be duly returned on the payment of the sum of five dollars, to cover expenses of advertising, etc.

(Signed) "CAPTAIN JETHRO FLAGG, Residence, Bixport, State of Maine."

Having finished this rather remarkable production, Captain Flagg read it aloud for the edification of Tad and Joe Whitney, who had just returned from the kitchen.

"That's the way I'd put it, Uncle Jeth," remarked the irrepressible Joe, with his mouth full of doughnuts and a suspicious handiness about his pockets, as Captain Flagg laid down the paper with a look of conscious pride. "I'd just say: Found in Broad Street station, Philadelphia, on suband-such a night, a hand-bag. Prove Property and pay charges. Address

Captain Jethro Flagg, Bixport,

Maine."

Captain Flagg regarded his audience with a look in which mild indignation was blended with pleasure. "Mebbe you would, Joseph," he said, with some severity, "mebbe you would; but, considerin' that I'm just a few years' older'n you, I've took the liberty of leavin' this my own way."

"All right, Uncle Jeth," returned the unabashed youth, "if you don't mind, I don't, I'm sure. Say, Tad," he remarked, briskly, turning to the secretly amused youth, "how'd you like me to go over to Miss Smith's in the morning and speak a good word for you, eh?"

"I'd like you to go with me, ever so much," warmly replied Tad. He did not rely much upon Joe's verbal recommendation, but he had a sort of feeling that the moral support of his presence would be a great deal.

"I'll call for you right after breakfast," briefly resumed Joe, with a twigle in the eye, that had Polly been present, she would have understood at once to mean mischief. But she was helping Mrs. Flagg with supper preparations, and the captain was busy sending off the copies of his untieto a couple of city papers, so Tad had nothing to say to Joe Whitney's love of practical jokes. And all the way home

Joe choked down certain little twinges of conscience, by representing to himself that it was "only a little fun, anyway," an excuse which I fancy has been common to mischievous youth from the fabled slinging of the frogs down to the present day.

Miss Smith was "sneaking" some bits out of her yard as Joe came by the house, and he at once volunteered his services with marked success. Sending the last hen shrieking across the street with a stick following closely at her tail-feathers, Joe closed the gate carefully.

"Oh, I say, Miss Smith," he remarked, as he was turning away, "I told Tad—the boy that Uncle Jeth found down here this trip—that 'doughnuts over with him in the morning—he's sort of bashful with strangers."

"Nobody'll notice you of any thing on the kind," Joe Whitney was Miss Smith's uncomplimentary answer. She was tall, thin, regular and forty, with a good hair, but rather unbecomingly temper. And Joe was not a prime favorite with Miss Smith, by reason of his rather peculiar tendencies to mis-chance, and the captain was busy

ney at the very apex of the roof, and a low, old-fashioned piazza on the western front. Two great elm-trees bent protectively over it, an orchard of gnarled apple-trees was in the rear, the vegetable garden at one side, and a small yard in front, where, as the two boys entered the gate, Miss Smith herself was raking away the dead leaves from a bed of springing crocuses.

At their approach Miss Smith threw her sun-bonnet back, and, straightening up the rake-handle, stood still erect, clasping it between her gloved hands—something like the manner of a sentinel with his musket when not on active duty—as she stared very hard at Tad, whose heart was beating furiously.

"So this is the boy," she said, in an uncompromising sort of voice—her remark seemingly addressed to herself—

"humph!"

This was by no means encouraging, and Tad's hopes went down below zero with considerable rapidity. Joe stood a little at one side, with a shadowy look of expectancy on his freckled face.

"How old are you, Tad?" suddenly shrieked Miss Smith, with such unexpected energy that mechanically Tad clapped his eyes and looked at her "Fourteen—in my fifteenth year!"

shouted Tad, whose face became quite crimson through the exertion. So did Joe's, but from a different cause.

Miss Smith started back involuntarily.

The Tennessee Senate has defeated a bill requiring liquor drinkers to pay a license of $1 annually.

The members of the Illinois Legislature have been notified by the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad Company that their free passes will be taken up on April 1st.

Senator Sherman will make a public speech at Nashville next Thursday, the 24th inst., at which time he is expected to put a spider in Brother Blaine's pudding.

The following able editorial is from the Hunter County News, a Illinois organ:

"If the G. R. Republican don't like us because we are for Blaine for Governor they can go to the d— and eat onions."

Saturday's Courier-Journal was a mammoth sixteen-page edition booming the city of Louisville. As Louisville has added 70,000 to her population since 1880 she has a right to start a little boomlet of her own. A recent census shows that the population of the city is now about 195,000.

The illustrations accompanying the unpublished letters of Thackeray, in Scribner's Magazine, will be unique. There will be portraits, views of places mentioned, etc.; but the principal illustrations will be Thackeray's own work. Many of the letters contain sketches, which will be reproduced in fac-simile; and others of his drawings, which are in the possession of Mrs. Brookfield, to whom most of the letters were written, will also be given.

"Allan Quatermain; or, A Frowning City," the new story by the author of "She," increases in interest in Demorest's Monthly for April, and promises to rival its predecessor in wonderful adventure. The other contents of the April number of Demorest's are equally interesting. Ecce-terprise is shown on every page of this Family Magazine. Not only are the best authors secured, but selections are made, so as to make up a Magazine giving information upon every point relative to the household. A lady possessing its valuable aid does not even have to buy her dress patterns for herself and children, as they are furnished free, and in any size required. The small subscription price ($2) saves hundreds of dollars in waste and worry, and furnishes reading matter that interests the whole family. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 17 East 14 street, New York.

The following endorsement is from the New York Observer, the leading religious and secular paper in the United States, and also one of the oldest:

"Very seldom do we have the opportunity to record such an evidence of intelligent public generosity as that manifested by Mr. John C. Latham, a native of Hopkinsville, Ky., who has given $50,000 to be used in macadamizing the public roads of Christian county, of which Hopkinsville is the county seat. In a few hours the merchants of Hopkinsville added $30,000 to the fund contributed by Mr. Latham. In no other important respect is America so inferior to Europe as in the comparative wealthlessness of our roads. It is possible to walk on a smooth, hard, and beautiful road from one end of Europe to the other. This fruit of civilization is almost unknown in our country, which is proud of its modern improvements. Our best roads are miserable at certain seasons, and such roads as are the rule abroad are not considered here to be within the possibilities. Good roads are of the greatest value not only for transportation, but for health and comfort, encouraging exercise in the open air."

The shifting panorama of horrors has varied the monotony of railroad accidents with a terrible hotel holocaust. The Richmond Hotel at Buffalo, N. Y., was burned early Friday morning while filled with guests. The hotel, a five-story building, was completely destroyed, at a loss of $500,000. The revised list of casualties shows six persons dead, 12 injured, five or six seriously, and five missing. The following are the dead: Wilson Purcell and Kate Wolf, of Lockport; Mark Osborne, body not yet recovered; Lizzie Welch, servant; Kate Kent, servant; Henry D. Rimmsey, died at the hospital.

Those missing and unaccounted for are: J. B. Acker, of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, supposed to have arrived on Thursday night and registered at the Richmond Hotel. Hiram Benedict, Jr., of Lockport. A special from Lockport says: Hiram Benedict, Jr., was undoubtedly lost in the Richmond Hotel fire. His father has given up all hope of his son being alive. Mr. Johnson, of Toronto, a railroad man; Joseph Sayers, of Erie, Pa.; J. C. Pratt, of Albany. The last named gentleman was known to have been at the Richmond Hotel.

Mr. Rumsey lost his life in saving little Jessie Mann, daughter of the hotel proprietor. She was so badly injured that her recovery is doubtful. There were 125 persons in the hotel, 78 of them guests. Many frightened and panic-stricken people leaped from the windows. One girl fell from the fourth story without being killed, though she was badly hurt. The hotel was a new one, having been opened for business less than a month. The fire originated in the basement.

The taxable property of Henderson county is assessed at $3,750,381. The number of males over 21 is put down at only 4,218.

Frank Clement committed suicide at Marion by putting a bullet through his brain. He was in the asylum here a while last fall and was still mentally imbalanced.

CARLEIGH, Ky., March 18.—Crowds of people are going daily to see the midwife girl baby that has been born to the wife of Joseph Ockerman, near this city. It is seven days old, weighs only twenty-four ounces, with a head not as large as a hen egg. The child is an indigo blue, and is covered with short black hair from head to foot.

Joe Cardwell, of Dawson, was fined $500 for keeping a gambling house about two years ago and subsequently moved to Crittenden county. Six months ago he joined the church and has been a devout Christian since. The other night the sheriff went to his house to arrest him on the old charge and looking in saw him kneeling at family prayers with his wife and child. When his devotional exercises were concluded the officer went in and arrested Cardwell. The Governor will be asked to remit the fine, which Cardwell cannot pay.

The State Board of Equalization met in the Capitol Tuesday, last and have settled down to hard work. All the books are in except the counties of Marion, Washington, Hopkins and Nicholas. These will arrive in a few days. Hon. W. J. Chinn, member from the 7th district, tendered his resignation on account of his health not allowing him to do justice to his position. The loss of Mr. Chinn will be keenly felt by the Board, as he was an excellent man for that position. The following named gentlemen compose the Board: 1st district, Jas. R. Lemon; 2nd district, C. N. Buchanan; 3rd district, G. E. Speck; 4th district, T. W. Turnbull; 5th district, C. J. Hines; 6th district, H. C. White; 7th district, Jas. W. Roberts; 8th district, J. A. Cohen; 9th district, Chas. Kitchen; 10th district, Eljah Combs; 11th district, T. T. Reynolds. Hon. Fayette Howitt is ex-officio a member of the board, and Hon. H. C. White is chairman. The board is diligently engaged in its duties, and the work will progress as rapidly as its tediousness will permit, as the work has become familiar to a number of the members.—Capitol.

The Free-Pass Business.

Senator Cullom, one of the promoters of the Inter-State Commerce bill, says in regard to the issue of passes: "If a railroad company sees proper to pay for its advertising by free transportation, as no doubt has been the custom (except that heretofore the railroads have gotten more than they gave out), the bill does not prevent it." The newspapers are not distributed half as much over the free-pass matter as the general public seems to be. The railroads have extended their courtesies to whomsoever they pleased, and, as a rule they have had the best of the bargain. If the railroad advertisements printed in the newspapers were paid for at the regular rates no passes would be accepted. As Senator Cullom says: "Heretofore the railroads have gotten more than they gave out." The newspapers are being constantly asked for favors, and, while the news is often of great interest to the traveling public, it is of equal importance to the railroads. There is necessarily a reciprocity of business interests between them which the Inter-State Commerce bill can not disturb. The bill has its merits and its faults, and they will soon become known when its provisions are put into practical operation. In the meantime the newspapers are prospering just as much as if the measure was not in existence.—Commercial.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly

For April.

For a public man, who has served the country in the Cabinet and the Diplomatic service as Minister at the greatest European courts, and as her abtest and most philosophic historian, George Bancroft is little known to the majority of readers, so far as his personality is concerned. The opening article in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for April, presents him to us as he is, and the sketch by Anselm Townier is extremely clever. An article on Modern English Artists by Lily Higgin, is worth reading by our wealthy patrons, who are sometimes beguiled by a temporary reputation of an artist to purchase at extravagant figures, canvases which the sober criticism of time puts down as mediocrity. The Voyage Down the Red Sea is cleverly told by Colonel C. Chas. Long, whose knowledge of Egyptian matters is so wide, and who shows great personal observation and skill in describing "Life's Little Things," is a curious sketch that will interest many, and "An Imp of Darkness," is a pleasant description of our "Mottled Owl," told by Dr. Van Fleet. Other articles tell us of "Heldberg," of "The Telescope and its Revelations." The stories, of which there are several, by Mrs. Helen W. Pierson, Millie W. Carpenter, J. E. Alston and others, are extremely good reading, while the interest of the strange story, "The Man Outside," increases steadily.

It is said that two prominent Democrats have been offered the Secretaryship of the Treasury and that both declined the honor. Would it not be a good idea to authorize a draft and force unwilling patriots to serve their country by filling Cabinet positions and other offices?

Coming Celebrations.

It seems to be pretty well settled that we shall have several national festivals to commemorate the adoption of the Federal Constitution, the inauguration of the first president, and the beginning of the period it marked the transition from the old confederacy to the more "perfect union" which followed the working operation of the new Constitution. It has been proposed to divide up the celebration of these among three cities, giving to New York the centennial of the inauguration of the first president, which occurred in this city, April 30, 1789, and marks the period when the governmental machinery was first put in motion; to Philadelphia the hundredth anniversary of the inauguration of the Constitution; and to Washington a "big show" extending from these preliminary celebrations down to 1892, so as to include the grand quadricentennial of the discovery of America, to be participated in by "the three Americas" and the sixteen American republics. It would doubtless be too much of a strain to attempt to keep up the interest for so long a time at Washington, and hence the latter city would prefer that both the other events should be celebrated there, leaving the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery to be provided for hereafter. It ought to occur to some one that one way to celebrate these national centennials would be to call a new national convention to revise the Constitution of the United States. Every State in the Union finds it necessary to amend its fundamental law to meet new conditions. This is done about every twenty years. Our Constitution is notoriously defective. Some of its machinery, such as the electoral college, does not work at all. Our national judiciary also needs overhauling. Justice is denied in the United States Courts, because the calendars are so crowded that it takes three years for a case to be reached, and often ten or twelve before it can be determined. There are many fundamental questions which would come up for settlement if we were to have a new Constitution. The status of woman before the law would have to be better defined, and then we need a national marriage law which would act uniformly in all the States, and save us from many of the scandals of irregular marriages. —Democrat's Monthly for April.
